

George Gurney Masterman QC (1929–2016)

George Masterman QC died on 2 October 2016, aged 87. He was an outstandingly individual member of the bar – hugely intelligent, energetic, fearless, always elegantly dressed and fit-looking, patrician in manner but generous and open in spirit. He knew many people in high places, but would never let fear of displeasing someone with power interfere with his doing what he decided was right. He leaves behind a great legacy of contribution not only to his clients but also to the law, to the barristers who were fortunate enough to have crossed his path, and to the Australian public. For nearly all of his time at the bar he was a member of the Eleventh Floor, where he will be particularly missed.

After secondary schooling at The King's School he was awarded the Broughton Scholarship, and studied at Oxford University from 1949 to 1952, receiving an MA. During his time at Oxford he travelled in the Middle East with Rupert Murdoch. Upon returning to Sydney he studied at Sydney University Law School. As was the practice then, he served articles of clerkship concurrently with the last years of his degree, at Allen Allen & Hemsley, under the formidable Sir Norman Cowper. It was there that he became friends with another articled clerk, James Wolfenson, later head of the World Bank.

He was admitted as a solicitor in March 1956, went to the bar in August 1957, and took silk in 1972. At the bar he developed a practice that covered an impressively broad range of fields of law. He had a deep knowledge of the law – not just of one or two areas of the law but of the law as an entire operating system. He had the creative intelligence to identify principles that could bear on a case in a way that was not at first obvious, and use them to test conventional understandings. Just one small example is that at a time when the Trade Practices Act 1974 was still novel he realised, in the short time available to prepare a defence to an interlocutory injunction application, that even though the Federal Court had been given exclusive jurisdiction to hear actions under Pt IV of the Trade Practices Act, it was possible to raise a defence in an action in the Supreme Court that a contract being sued on was contrary to s 45 of the Act¹. He argued many cases that have been of lasting significance – though, inevitably for any barrister, not always on the winning side. They included *Trade Practices Commission v Tooth & Co Ltd*² (which brought an end to the system of brewers owning pubs and leasing them subject to a tie that required that only the beer of that brewer be sold there), *R v Judges of the Federal Court*³ (which decided that the provision in the Trade Practices Act that says that 'any other person' can bring an action to seek an injunction enforce the Act means what it says, so that a trader has standing to require its competitor to observe the Act), and *University of New South Wales v Moorhouse*⁴ (which held that universities had been aiding and abetting breaches of copyright by having photocopying machines in their libraries for students to use unsupervised – a decision which led to legislative change to provide for compulsory copyright licensing to educational institutions)⁵. He appeared in many of the cases and tribunal inquiries that tested the limits of the Trade Practices Act 1974 in the decade or so after its introduction.

His practice at the bar was not just a matter of receiving briefs and appearing. The NSW Government appointed him as an inspector to inquire into the collapse in 1975 of the stockbroking firm Patrick Partners. He acted pro bono in many cases that raised public interest questions, civil liberties or consumer rights – as varied as defending the publisher of Portnoy's Complaint, defending nude sunbathers, and seeking leave (unsuccessfully) to appear for the International Commission of Jurists as an intervener or an amicus curiae in the Stolen Generations case⁶. They included advising a student filmmaker who had liberated a copy of her exposé of what went on in a chicken-processing factory when her film school decided the film was not suitable for public viewing⁷. His opinion to the International Commission of Jurists, that the NSW Coroner might have jurisdiction to investigate the death of one of the Australian journalists killed by Indonesian troops in East Timor in 1975 was one of the causes of a coronial inquest eventually being held in 2007 into the death of the Balibo Five.⁸

He was particularly generous and helpful to young barristers, encouraging solicitors to brief promising young juniors, and being very willing to share his knowledge and experience. I remember practical advice like ‘Get an expert involved early – then it becomes his case’. He was the co-author, with Zeke Solomon, of a textbook on the *Trade Practices Act 1965*⁹, described by Ninian Stephen QC as ‘from a practitioner’s viewpoint quite the most useful of the several Australian texts now available which examine and comment upon the Commonwealth Trade Practices Act.’¹⁰ While running his practice he also was a visiting professor at the University of NSW in the 1970s. The courses he taught showed the range of his interests and abilities – he taught the technical and detailed subject of patent law, and also a course advising students on the techniques of representing public interest groups¹¹.

But his interests and energy were not confined to practise as a barrister. He was a director of the Australian Institute of Political Science, its chairman for two years, editor of its magazine Australian Quarterly, and editor of books of its proceedings.¹² He was a member of the NSW Writers’ Centre Management Committee in the 1970s, and a member of the Australian Society of Authors. He played hockey for many decades, first with the Legal Eagles (a team started in 1956)¹³. He was an instigator of the re-formation of a Bar hockey team in 1990¹⁴. In 1995, when George was in his mid-60s, Bar News referred to his ‘enthusiastic and vigorous play’ for the bar hockey team¹⁵. For a while in 1989 – 1991 he was ‘reader’s editor’ of the Sydney Morning Herald – a position intended to allow him to adjudicate independently on readers’ complaints about stories, and possibly expose broader issues about newsgathering or newspaper production. However after producing a number of reports with findings adverse to journalists, journalists blackbanned co-operating with him. The position became untenable, and he terminated his contract¹⁶. He provided practical assistance when his wife Joan established ecotourism ventures in Tasmania.¹⁷

His single greatest contribution was the period he spent as ombudsman of NSW, from April 1981 until he resigned effective in early 1988. The position of ombudsman was created by the Ombudsman Act 1974, with some powers to investigate and report on complaints about the conduct of a public authority. Some additional powers of oversight of the police were conferred on the ombudsman by the Police Regulation (Allegations of Misconduct) Act 1978. George was the second ombudsman appointed in NSW, and the only silk to have ever filled the office. A front-page story on his appointment in the Sydney Morning Herald referred to him as ‘dashing and unconventional’.¹⁸ He certainly proved to be unconventional, as he transformed the office totally – to such an extent that he is sometimes mistakenly referred to as having been the first ombudsman. He applied his energy, intelligence, imagination and courage to turning it into as effective a questioner of the legality and fairness of administrative action as the legislation permitted. Under the Ombudsman Act he used to the full the powers of a royal commissioner to investigate complaints, the power to conduct an investigation of his own motion, and the power to make special reports to parliament. He was well aware that a complaint that was not particularly significant in itself could be the result of a systemic weakness in administrative procedure, that should be corrected. He developed a procedure for according natural justice to people involved in an investigation, under which if any adverse comment on a person was being considered that person was provided with a draft of the parts of the report that bore upon his or her conduct, and given the opportunity to make submissions.

When he became ombudsman, the powers he had concerning complaints against the police were confined to reviewing a file of papers that emerged from the police’s own internal investigation of the complaint. He reported to parliament that such a system was ‘a dangerous charade likely to deceive the public into believing that there is a public watchdog or guardian when there is not’¹⁹, and ultimately the Court of Appeal upheld his view that he was entitled to decide that he was neither satisfied that a complaint was sustained, nor satisfied that it was not sustained²⁰. This led to a legislative change, which allowed the ombudsman to conduct his own investigation once the police had finished theirs. In consequence police were seconded to the ombudsman’s office to assist in these re-investigations²¹.

He was so effective in investigating and exposing deficiencies in administration that many public servants, police and ministers resented his effectiveness. After his period as ombudsman he was never offered the judicial position for which his intellectual ability and knowledge undoubtedly qualified him. But his public contribution both as a barrister and as an involved citizen was enormous.

John Barrington Bishop (1937–2016)

Dr John Bishop, barrister at Third Floor Wentworth Chambers, died on Saturday, 3 September 2016. His funeral was held at St Andrews Cathedral in Sydney. The following is an extract from the eulogy delivered by Kanishka Raffel, dean of the Parish of Sydney.

John Bishop was born on 22 April 1937 to Bruce and Lena Bishop. He was the youngest of two boys. John attended Canterbury Boys High School, a selective public school with many prominent alumni, including former prime minister John Howard, who was at the school at the same time as John. John excelled in literary subjects, such as Latin.

From his youth, John was a life-long fan of rugby league and was an avid follower of the St George Dragons. He attended the University of Sydney and attained a Bachelor of Arts degree with first class honours. He majored in Hebrew, as he had a deep love of the Old Testament. He also undertook theological studies and joked that, if ever ordained, he could end up as Bishop Bishop. After undertaking studies in economics he settled into the study of law. He was awarded a Bachelor of Laws degree with first class honours and then a Master of Laws degree with first class honours, both from the University of Sydney. John also undertook doctoral studies through the London School of Economics and Political Science. This entailed many visits to London to see his supervisor. He was awarded his PhD in law in 1988.

He worked as a lecturer in law at Macquarie University from 1978 to 1984. He lectured in the administration of criminal justice and in evidence and procedure. He enjoyed setting examination questions which entailed hypotheticals featuring the St George Dragons, much to the amusement of students.

He began practising at the New South Wales Bar in February 1978. He practised mainly in common law, criminal law and administrative law. In 2001 he was appointed as counsel assisting the Royal Commission into the Building and Construction Industry in Melbourne. He maintained a thriving practice until his death at the age of 79.

Arguably his major contribution to law was as an author. He wrote Criminal Procedure, first published by Butterworths in 1983 and which went to five reprints. A second edition was published in 1998. The book remains a seminal authority on criminal procedure from a national perspective and an important practical resource for judges and practitioners in the field of criminal law.

Terence Fenwick Marelly Naughton (1941 – 2016)

Queen's Counsel, Judge of the District Court of NSW

Former District Court Judge Terry Naughton QC died peacefully at the Sydney Adventist Hospital on 15 August 2016, after a brief illness. He was farewelled on 22 August 2016 at St James King Street.

His Honour was educated at Drummoyne High School for the first three years of secondary school and for the last two years at Sydney Boy's High School, where he was a prefect and debating captain. He read law at the University of Sydney and was also captain of the debating team. He completed articles of clerkship at Clayton Utz & Co and was later an employed solicitor at Blake Dawson.

He read and then established himself in 1968 on Twelfth Floor Wentworth Chambers Waddell QC was his Pupil Master. He was led by Forbes Officer QC, Deane QC and Lockhart QC. Finlay QC, Sully QC and Rolfe QC were fellow floor members and friends, together with friends on other floors such as Tamberlin QC, Handley QC and Malcolm McLelland QC. He accompanied Sir Maurice Byers QC to the Privy Council in the 1970s.

He held a long-term brief, led by Jenkins QC and Morling QC, in Codelfa Construction Pty Ltd v State Rail Authority of NSW (1982) 149 CLR 337, concerning the eastern suburbs railway. Shortly after its conclusion, he was appointed queen's counsel.

He was briefed widely, but with a large practice in the Land and Environment Court. He authored the eminent practice work Naughton – Land and Environment Court of New South Wales; Law and Practice, first published in 1993 which still bears his name.

He was a fastidious and meticulous counsel, placing emphasis on the factual details of the case. Colleagues and friends knew of his legendary reverence for the written and printed word. A magnificent library of calf-bound reports graced the shelves of his spacious chambers. In 1987, inspired by the photography exhibition 'American County Courthouses' of William Clift, an American photographer, Naughton QC took his family and his manual Linhoff 4x5 camera to small towns with beautiful old courthouses in regional NSW, Victoria and Tasmania. He captured their essence in beautiful light. He had the eye for detail, an appreciation for subtlety and the patience of Job to wait for the best shot.

Naughton QC's exhibition at the SH Ervin Gallery 'Places of Judgment New South Wales' was critically acclaimed. Dupain reviewed the exhibition in the Sydney Morning Herald and described the chronicle of images as '...immaculate and beautiful'. Both Dupain and Clift became friends as well as mentors.

Naughton was appointed a judge of the District Court in 1997. With characteristic care and attention, he heard both civil and criminal cases. No judgment was long-reserved despite a significant workload. He retired in 1997 to continue his involvement with his family and his interest in photography and ancient coins.

Greg Anthony Farmer (1959–2016)

Gregory Anthony Farmer passed away on Monday 22 August 2016. He was surrounded by his family and several close friends. It was his 57th birthday.

Less than a year earlier he had been sworn in as a Judge of the District Court of New South Wales.

But even after such a short period on the bench, Greg had carved out a reputation amongst practitioners as being fair and even handed in the dispensation of justice in both civil and criminal matters which came before him. It was a fitting and well-deserved reputation; in all my years of practice and from the time we first met in 1983 I had never met a man who was so in control of his feelings and his sense of purpose.

Many people would share this view that I had about Greg and it is a terrible shame that he had such a short time to use his qualities for the greater good; the administration of justice.

Greg graduated from Macquarie University in 1983 and was admitted as a solicitor in December of that year. He had been studying part time whilst working full time in Magistrates Courts Administration, where he soon carved out a reputation as a handy all-rounder on the cricket field.

After his admission he was employed as a legal officer, first with Corrective Services and then later, when he switched rolls and became in house counsel with the Commonwealth DPP. The experience he gained in these positions provided the foundation for Greg to develop and extensive criminal practice at the bar for the next 20 years.

Greg was appointed as senior counsel in 2011 and as both junior and senior counsel, he appeared in a number of prominent cases for both the defence and the Crown. In doing so he obtained invaluable experience at both ends of the bar table.

At his swearing in on 15 September 2015, the Attorney General of NSW, the Honourable Gabrielle Upton spoke of Greg's achievements at the bar, including his many appearances at public enquiries and his position as lead counsel at the Villawood Detention Centre riot cases, in which he was charged with running 14 separate prosecutions. The Attorney noted that Greg maintained 'constant composure in dealing with the demands of all those legal representatives.'

There is no doubt that Greg was a fine lawyer who had all the qualities which would equip him for a long and distinguished career on the bench. Everyone in the law who knew him shares that view.

Greg was a tremendous husband, father, son and brother and he had an endless affection and admiration for his wonderful mother Pat, who took on the role as a single mother to Greg, his brother Brian and their three sisters Helen, Susan and Stella (all of whom were aged between 5 and 11 years) following the sudden and untimely death of his own father Brian.

He was a loving and devoted husband to his wife Jane and a fine and caring father to his two young children, Aiden and Prue. He adored them both and often spoke about them with great pride. And in all his years as a Barrister and Judge he always managed to keep a keen and active interest in all the activities in which they were involved.

But, and as I sit here preparing these words about Greg I know, as do so many other people, that he was so much more than just a great lawyer and a good and loving family man.

When a person is taken from us so suddenly and in such tragic circumstances it is natural that people will be stunned and will have some trouble dealing with the loss of their friend. With Greg's tragic and premature passing there was an outpouring of sorrow from so many people from so many different walks of life.

Was it his natural warmth and kindness or was it his dry sense of humour that those of us who are left will remember most? Or was it some other aspect of his personality which so attracted people to him?

It's now just over two months since Greg's passing and, over that time, so many people have spoken to me about times that they had with Greg and how much they have been saddened by his death.

Greg is survived by his wife Jane and by his two children Aiden and Prudence. I know that I and so many of Greg's friends and associates will be there for them if ever and whenever they might need us. It's the least that any of us can do for such a fine man. We will all miss him.

Eric John Shields QC (1926–2016)

Eric John Shields QC passed away on 14 September 2016. He was the son of Wollongong school teacher and later headmaster, Eric William Shields. In order to avoid confusion, or to avoid unwanted monikers like 'Little Eric', he adopted the name John Shields.

The family moved around New South Wales spending time in various school locations at Granville Central, Forster Public School, Ashfield Public School, Molong Public School, St Peters Public School, Lidcombe, Belmore, Canterbury and Campsie.

John Shields excelled at school from an early age, being dux of Molong Public School in December 1938 and learning the piano. He attended Canterbury Boys High School and soon after set his sights on a career in the law. He graduated from the University of Sydney with a Bachelor of Laws in 1948.

On leaving University John worked in the New South Wales Public Trust Office for two years as a clerk and then moved on to become an article clerk, in which he served for three years. On 9 February 1951 he was admitted as a solicitor and moved to Condobolin in western NSW where he practised in the firm of DGC Driffield, Hodby and Shields for 11 years. In 1954 he married Margaret Dorothy Ludowici and had four children: Dimity Margaret (1956), Earle William John (1958), Merrilee Anne (1960) and Kylie Rhonda in (1964, deceased).

On 10 March 1961 John was admitted as a barrister and the family returned to Sydney and set up home in Pymble. He continued in private practise until October 1971, when he was appointed the fourth public defender for NSW. In 1973 John Shields became the country public defender.

On 20 December 1974 he married Beryl Muriel Gapes at Holterman Uniting Church in Crows Nest.

On 1 December 1976 John was commissioned as a queen's counsel and subsequently became deputy senior public defender (country). He was appointed senior public defender for NSW in 1982 until 1986, when he retired from this position.

In 1977 John was appointed the legal member of the Public Accountants Registration Board and remained in this position until 1985. About 1980 he was appointed a member of the Helsham Inquiry into the Appointment of Liquidators.

From 1982 until his retirement John was a member of, and at times, on the Council of Australian Academy of Forensic Sciences.

John's funeral was held at St Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Wentworth Falls on Saturday, 24 September 2016. One of the eulogies was delivered by his second daughter, Merrilee Chignell. She spoke of John's love of the law.

First and foremost he loved the law- This is what drove him, inspired him and fired him. It kept his mind sharp and he was tenacious in a battle. He would fight a legal cause or injustice to the end. He also had the skills to argue black was white. I believe he was known as 'fine-tooth comb Shields'.

Dad's other great love was his car. His Citroen C5 was his pride and joy. He regularly took friends on the drive to Wollongong citroen where he had it serviced and he kept it immaculate. He also kept a camera in the car for the procuring of evidence in the case that some other person illegally infringed his rights as a driver. No accident was dad's fault and he was always able to prove it. Unfortunately AAMI did not agree. This led to an extensive battle with AAMI.

You may be shocked and stunned to know that our father was stubborn and single minded. Not a little bit but extremely.

I can say that I am so proud of the strength of this great man, I admire and respect the way dad conducted himself for his steely resilience. I have whispered to him at a quiet moment that he has not let himself or anyone else down. Most importantly he remained in control of all the decisions in his life to the end and we can be well proud of this wise and just man.
